The Multicultural Centre for Women's Health invites bilingual women across Australia to participate in a one-day advocacy skills development session.

What will I gain from participating in an MCWH Advocacy Skills Development Session for Bilingual Women?

These skills development sessions are aimed at building the advocacy capacities of bilingual women.

Participants will then be further able to pass on skills to other women in their own communities about advocacy in their preferred languages, with the added benefit of being from the community.

An advocacy toolkit has been developed by MCWH and it will be used as a guide during sessions. Certificates of program participation will be awarded.

What do I need to participate?

To participate in one of these sessions you need to:

- ✪ be from the local community;
- ✪ have a basic knowledge of English;
- ✪ speak a community language;
- ✪ be committed to sharing information with other women.
